The Media and the Public Sphere

A Deliberative Model of Democracy

Thomas Häussler

Routledge
Taylor & Francis Group
NEW YORK AND LONDON

Contents

List of illustrations xii
Acknowledgements xiv
Series Editor's Foreword xv

1 Introduction 1
Note 10
References 10

2 Democracy, discourse and the public sphere: the deliberative approach 13
2.1 Deliberative democracy: a general definition 14
2.2 Morality, legitimacy and democracy: the Habermasian perspective 15
2.2.1 Challenges and criticism of deliberative democracy 18
2.3 The deliberative public sphere 25
2.4 Hypotheses 34
Notes 36
References 39

3 Methods and measures of deliberation 43
3.1 From the ideal to the real: the measurement of discourse quality 43
3.1.1 Empirical approaches to deliberation 44
3.1.2 Measuring the quality of political discourse: three approaches 48
3.1.3 Building discourse quality dimensions for the media 55
3.2 Assessing discourse quality: the social network paradigm and the power of coalitions 62
3.2.1 The discursive space: social network analysis and deliberative quality 63

3.2.2 Discourse quality and discourse coalitions 65
3.3 Selecting the national context: the UK 65
3.4 Sampling the media coverage 67
3.5 Political debates and public spheres types 68
3.5.1 Unilateral disarmament (1960) 70
3.5.2 Commonwealth immigration (1965) 71
3.5.3 Secondary picketing (1980) 72
3.5.4 The Anglo-Irish Agreement (1985) 73
3.5.5 Fuel protest (2000) 74
3.5.6 Anti-terrorism legislation (2005) 74
3.6 Summary of research design 75
Notes 77
References 79

4 The media and the deliberative quality of public spheres 85
4.1 Inclusiveness 86
4.1.1 Who is the most balanced of them all? 87
4.1.2 Inclusion or exclusion? Discursive access to the public sphere 91
4.1.3 Inclusiveness as diversity 95
4.1.4 Conclusion 97
4.2 Role change 98
4.2.1 Deliberation and symmetric interaction: initial observations 100
4.2.2 The deliberative symmetry of public spheres 102
4.2.3 Deliberative roles and discursive spaces 103
4.2.4 Conclusion 109
4.3 Reciprocity 112
4.3.1 Monologue or dialogue? 113
4.3.2 Inclusion or exclusion? The reciprocity of discursive spaces 115
4.3.3 Reciprocal density and discursive integration 119
4.3.4 Conclusion 120
4.4 Reflexivity 122
4.4.1 Dumbing down or reflexive? 123
4.4.2 The equality of reason? 126
4.4.3 Who's the most reflexive of them all? 128
4.4.4 Conclusion 130
4.5 Perspectives: the content of justifications 131
4.5.1 The breadth of democratic debate 132
4.5.2 The public sphere as a web of reasons 135

4.5.3 The centres and peripheries of reason 138
4.5.4 Conclusion: actors, reasons and the drivers of deliberation 141
Notes 144
References 146

5 Democratic conflict and deliberative coalitions 148
5.1 Agreement and endorsement coalitions 151
5.2 Demand coalitions 153
5.3 Criticism coalitions 155
5.4 Political conflict and disagreement as the driving forces of deliberation 160
Notes 161
References 162

6 Conclusion 163
6.1 Strong and weak public spheres 164
6.2 Disagreement and deliberation 168
Notes 172
References 172

Sources sampled 174
Codebook 175
Index 188