Chapter 1	Introduction: politics and policy – what do we want to explain and how?	1
 PART I – PROCESSES: elections alternate party-based governments with different preferences and priorities, thus bringing public policies into line with centrist majority preferences in the long run 9
Chapter 2	Why politics? Making policies to provide public goods	13
Chapter 3	How popular preferences develop	23
Chapter 4	Measuring electoral preferences	41
Chapter 5	Electors' policy thinking: from a joined-up left-right perspective to issue-by-issue reactions	58
Chapter 6	Party policy thinking: framing policy targets and election-based estimates of majority preferences	71
Chapter 7	Matching public policy to popular preferences	104
Chapter 8	The 'web of explanation': relating process theories to each other within a general political science context	132

PART II – RULES: rules designate – but may misrepresent – majority preferences, thus biasing policy outcomes	141
Chapter 9 Majority choice of policies: voting paradoxes and attempted solutions	143
Chapter 10 General elections and election systems: finalizing the collective choice of policies	164
PART III – PROTAGONISTS: parties and governments shape popular preferences and reflect them in public policies	183
Chapter 11 Citizens, parties and governments: interactive preference formation	185
Chapter 12 Political parties: ideological policy carriers	205
Chapter 13 Governments: prime participants in policymaking	237
Chapter 14 Ministries: separating out policy areas	258
PART IV – STATES: collective action without binding rules	289
Chapter 15 Globalization and world democracy	291
PART V – EXPLANATION: explaining politics by specifying its processes more exactly so as to predict outcomes	319
Chapter 16 Generating ‘Big Data’: sources, procedures, error checks	330
Chapter 17 Simplifying ‘Big Data’: dimensions, majorities and the (missing?) middle	362
Chapter 18 Managing ‘Big Data’: theoretical explanation and statistical analysis	382
Chapter 19 Developing political science by explaining democracy	414
