TABLE OF CONTENTS

CHAPTER I.—PARLIAMENTARY REPRESENTATION

	PAGE
Does Parliament really reflect the nation?	17
Leaving aside the Upper House, could the House of Commons be more really representative?	18
The anomaly of very unequal constituencies	19
Instances: Romford and Kilkenny, &c.	19
Anomalies and restrictions of the Franchise... ..	20
Heavy expenses involved in becoming Member of Parliament	20
Should minorities as well as majorities be represented? ...	21

CHAPTER II.—REDISTRIBUTION OF SEATS

Present inequalities are very great	23
Constituencies equal in population desired; a normal or average-sized constituency should be taken as the basis	24
Historical county boundaries previously always respected must be somewhat disregarded	24
Reduction of Irish representation inevitable, and of the representation of certain counties— e.g. , Cornwall and Devon	25
The distinction between county and borough constituencies should be also abolished	26
Movements and growth of population in cities necessitate changes in the constituencies	28
Instances: From Liverpool, London, and the north and east districts outside the London area, &c.	29
Generally, at present urban and industrial centres are under-represented, and rural districts over-represented, in the House of Commons... ..	31

	PAGE
Automatic redistribution, according to the results of each decennial census, should be introduced by the next Redistribution Act; this would follow the practice of foreign countries and British Colonies	31

CHAPTER III.—REGISTRATION REFORM

The number of electors in the United Kingdom	34
The possible number of electors under Manhood Suffrage	34
Bill introduced by Mr. Asquith in 1893 to reform Registration	35
Registration officials wanted	36
Eight proposals of the Bill of 1893, viz.:
(a) Shorter qualifying period	37
(b) Rating not essential to qualification... ..	38
(c) Removal not to disqualify	38
(d) Lodger franchise less restricted	39
(e) Better arrangement of register	40
(f) Cost of registration	41
(g) Officials neglecting duty to be fined	41
(h) Dates of qualifying period to be changed	41
Other anomalies in present system	42
The latch-key voter question	42
The ownership qualification unequal and antiquated, also unjust	44
The cases of the Hornsey, Fareham, and Blackpool Divisions	46
The Wimbledon Register of Voters analysed to illustrate the peculiarities of our existing system	47

CHAPTER IV.—REPRESENTATION IN BRITISH COLONIES

Colonial electoral institutions, remaining British in sentiment and being strongly democratic, show many divergencies from home methods. Taking nine points, viz.:	49
A. Qualifications for the franchise; roughly, Manhood Suffrage is the rule	50
B. How voters' lists are made up. "One man one vote" universal	53
C. Polling provisions: secret ballot, closing of public-houses, postal vote	54
D. Second Ballot, or Preferential Voting	55
E. Cost of elections	56

	PAGE
F. Election petition procedure	57
G. Formation of constituencies; electoral divisions equalised on a population (or electorate) basis ...	58
H. Female Suffrage in Australasia	60
Summary of colonial electoral methods	60

CHAPTER V.—THE FRANCHISE

The right to vote now practically recognised everywhere ...	62
Universal Manhood Suffrage in foreign countries	62
In British Colonies	63
Manhood Suffrage simple and intelligible	63
Restrictions on the franchise are all forms of class legislation	63
The Belgian plural vote more intelligible	64
The theory of Universal Suffrage is the duty of a citizen to his State	64
This principle may now be adopted	65
The present franchise system is complex, uncertain, and very costly	65
Thirteen years ago its annual cost was estimated at over three-quarters of a million	66
The annual cost of registration at present to ratepayers and politicians is over 2s. 3d. per voter... ..	67
Facts and figures of the London district show the great labour for officials and great cost to ratepayers of the present system	67
The principles of a simple sensible franchise system :
1. Adult manhood suffrage... ..	69
2. Residential qualification	69
3. Lists prepared by special officers	69
4. Three months in a place to qualify forthwith ...	69
5. Registration officials to be constantly revising lists ...	69
6. Officials to decide on claims; appeal to County Court	69
7. Annual publication of lists; supplementary lists every two months	69
8. Same list would serve for local elections	70

CHAPTER VI.—WOMAN'S SUFFRAGE

The suffrage question raises the issue of woman's claim to the parliamentary vote	72
The reasons in favour of granting the vote to women ...	72

	PAGE
The reasons against it	73
The Parliamentary position of the question	75
The position in the country	75
A suggested policy to secure a fair and free consideration by Parliament	76
If it were declared that women would be ineligible to sit in Parliament it would probably help the movement ...	77
If Manhood Suffrage were granted, women might have Parliamentary votes if they individually claimed ...	77
The mass of men and women are not yet eager for the proposed change	77

CHAPTER VII.—PROPORTIONAL REPRESENTATION

At present a minority in the country can elect a majority in Parliament	79
Mr. Corbett's analysis of votes cast at the last six General Elections	79
A very small majority of votes equally distributed might secure the complete representation in Parliament for one party	81
A minority in the country is quite likely again to swamp a majority in the country	82
Proportional Representation, which would prevent such evils, is not possible with our present single-member constituencies	82
Single-member constituencies survive because an old tradition and are simple and intelligible	82
Modern developments of politics make Proportional Representation increasingly desirable	83
Four methods of Proportional Representation :
(1) The Limited Vote	84
(2) The Cumulative Vote	84
(3) The Elective Quotient; explanation of this method with the transferable vote	84
(4) The Party List system, in Belgium, &c.	86
Mr. Hare's system attempted to combine Proportional Representation with single-member constituencies ...	88
The possible varieties of method to secure Proportional Representation are very numerous	88
Growth in favour, and adoption, of the principle in foreign countries	89

Table of Contents

CHAPTER VIII.—THE APPLICATION OF PRO- PORTIONAL REPRESENTATION

	PAGE
The growth in the demand for Proportional Representation
The advantages claimed for it	90
Objections alleged against it	91
The difficulty presented by bye-elections	92
If adopted for our Parliamentary elections large voting districts to return five to ten Members would be formed with 310,000 to 620,000 inhabitants on the single Transferable Vote method... ..	93
And single-member constituencies could be retained by allotting them to the successful candidates after the poll	94
Colonial experience supports the Transferable Vote ...	95
Experimental election on this principle in 1906	95
Or the Party List method might be introduced	96
Question of distribution of seats when fractions of the quota occur	97
Advantages of the Party List system	98
Comparison of Transferable Vote and Party List	98
Proportional Representation in municipal elections ...	99

CHAPTER IX.—THE REFERENDUM

The Referendum constantly desired by Conservatives when out of office, and never when in power ...	102
Switzerland, the classic land of the Referendum, has it in three forms: (1) the Initiative. (2) Facultative. (3) Obligatory	103
Referendum exists with us in certain local events, and is now advocated as a national institution... ..	104
Arguments against it	105
Arguments in favour of the Referendum	106
(1) At General Election one subject generally dominates all others; hence on many questions the people are never directly consulted	106
(2) It alone enables a nation to be really self-governing	107
(3) It expresses the popular will as against parliamentary wishes	107
(4) It checks hasty and unjust party legislation ...	108
(5) It would solve the House of Lords question, &c... ..	108
(6) It is the one power for the people to rely on against the danger of wealth exerting undue influence in the modern State	108
Possible use of General Election in order to submit particular issues to the direct popular vote	109

Table of Contents

CHAPTER X.—SECOND BALLOT OR TRANSFER- ABLE VOTE—WHICH?

	PAGE
The Jarrow and Colne Valley elections emphasise the need for securing a clear majority for an election	111
A man may win if opposed by two others, each more preferred than himself	113
The Second Ballot in foreign countries	113
Arguments in its favour	114
Arguments against it, especially that it results in compacts between parties devoid of principle	115
The Transferable Vote has always the advantages, and none of the disadvantages, of Second Ballot	116
It is in use in Queensland	117
Embodied in the Bill of Mr. J. M. Robertson, M.P.	117
The result of an election under this Bill would not be invariably accurate, to correct which certain modifications are proposed	119

CHAPTER XI.—CANDIDATURE AND ITS COSTS

Candidates local and non-local	121
Expenditure on organisations	122
Subscriptions to charities and societies, if given to benefit classes or individuals among voters contrary to spirit of the Corrupt Practices Act	123
Proposal to add to this Act so as to prevent the giving of so-called charity with doubtful intention	124
Representatives or delegates? The "Caucus"	126

CHAPTER XII.—CORRUPT AND ILLEGAL PRACTICES

Morality of elections greatly improved during last century, but bribery is still dangerous	128
The Corrupt and Illegal Practices Act of 1883	129
List of Corrupt and Illegal Practices	130
New forms of corruption detailed in "Electioneering up to Date"; "ground-baiting"; entertainments; treating might be discouraged by a proposed new clause amending the Act; boycotting, undue influence exerted on tradesmen	131
The case of "Bye-Election Tactics." Independent organisations working for a candidate at an election cannot

be prevented under the existing law, and to prohibit them would be to limit free discussion	134
Canvassing, in theory and in practice, is not essential to electioneering, and some urge its prohibition	137
Arguments in favour of canvassing	138
Arguments for its prohibition	138
Proposed clause to prevent undue influence in canvassing ...	139
Vehicles should not be allowed to carry voters to the poll as at present ; proposed enactment	140

CHAPTER XIII.—THE LIMIT OF LEGAL EXPENDITURE

The legal limit of expenditure might be reduced without hindering legitimate political activity	142
When do the election expenses of a candidate begin ? ...	142
This question is not capable of an exact answer. Legislation should fix six months as the time before an election back to which election expenses should be returned ...	143
County Council election expenses already kept on a much lower scale	144
The limit of expenses in boroughs and counties should be the same	145

CHAPTER XIV.—ELECTION PETITIONS

Elections may be challenged as to their legality by an election petition	147
Corrupt or illegal practice by a successful candidate or his agents is the most common ground of a petition... ..	148
Election petition no means of punishing bribery, &c., when unsuccessful and an inadequate means of judging and condemning electoral practices	149
An election petition must be undertaken within a month of the poll, and £1,000 deposited as security ; even in the worst cases of corruption many difficulties in the way of success in petitions	149
Various suggestions for reform... ..	151

CHAPTER XV.—REFORMS IN ELECTORAL MACHINERY

Costliness to candidates of the electoral machinery ...	152
Security at nomination	152

	PAGE
The total cost of taking last General Election was over £200,000	153
The scale charges are unduly high	153
The elections of the London County Council show that the cost might be much reduced—by about two-thirds ...	154
Great economy would be effected if the direct control of Parliament, with Parliament paying the costs, were exercised over all Parliamentary elections ...	155
£50,000 per annum voted by Parliament would more than satisfy this requirement	155
Possible precautions against vexatious candidatures ...	155
Polling stations should be increased in number on a uniform principle	156
Hours of polling might be more elastic	157
Should public-houses be closed on polling days? This is part of a great social question, the influence of the drink trade in national life	158
All the polls at a General Election should be held on one day	159
The Postal Vote, as in the Colonies, might be introduced ...	160

CHAPTER XVI.—SHORTER PARLIAMENTS AND PAYMENT OF MEMBERS

These changes would bring us back to the earlier conditions of Parliament	161
Formerly annual Parliaments were the rule... ..	161
Points of the Chartist agitation which are now no longer burning issues... ..	161
Payment of Members would also be a return to ancient practice... ..	162
Almost universal in foreign countries and the Colonies ...	162
Arguments against payment of Members, and for it ...	164
Resolution of the House of Commons in its favour ...	165

CHAPTER XVII.—CONCLUSION

Reviewing our electoral system :
Proportional Representation may come sooner or later.
So too the Referendum ; this, like reform of the House of Lords, seems distant	167
Pressing reforms are :
Redistribution of seats	168
A simpler and wider franchise	168
Possibly female suffrage	168

	PAGE
Urgently pressing reforms, which should be dealt with before next General Election, are :
1. Payment of returning officers' charges from public funds	168
2. All elections on one day	169
3. No plural voting	169
4. Transferable Vote where more than two candidates contest a single seat	169
5. Possibly settlement of doubts as to the latch-key voter	169
